

The aim of the education to be held in museums is to build bridges between the objects exhibited in the museum and people, to integrate the objects with their lives, to develop the creative thoughts of the educated people while using the museums as an educational environment.

With the principle of being at the service of the society and its development, the museum is an institution that collects and preserves tangible and intangible materials/assets that bear witness to people and the environment they live in, and conducts research on them and shares this information non-profitably for the members of the society to study, learn and enjoy.

MUSEUMS AND MUSEUM EDUCATION

MUSEUMS ARE THE MEMORY OF COMMUNITIES.

MUSEUMS ARE OUR UNWALLED CLASSROOMS

Different classifications are made for museums. Museums can be classified according to the administrative unit they are affiliated with, "according to the region they serve", "according to the audience they address", "according to the content of their collections", "according to the methods of displaying their collections", etc. The International Council of Museums ICOM Museums can most commonly be classified according to their collections as follows:

- General Museums
- Archaeological Museums
- Ethnographic Museums
- Art Museums
- History Museums
- Natural History Museums
- Industry Museums
- Science and Technology Museums
